Academy of Medical Educators

The Academy of Medical Educators (AoME), established in 2006, is a charitable organisation which exists to advance medical education for the benefit of the public.

It is the professional organisation for all those involved in medical, dental and veterinary education and training

The Academy is the standard setting body for medical educators in the UK. Its Professional Standards define the level of competence that medical educators should achieve at each point in their careers. The Standards provide a recognised framework for professionals to demonstrate expertise in medical education through accreditation as a medical teacher. Recognition by AoME demonstrates skills and competence when applying for revalidation, promotion and approval as a trainer.

The Academy has over 1000 members across the UK and beyond, who benefit from: access to a network of medical educators at every level of career progression; regular newsletters, mailings and updates via the online community; a programme of academic meetings and events, including the annual Calman Lecture and national conferences; special interest groups; AoME awards and prizes, and support in applications for national and local awards.

Jacky Hayden CBE, President

The Award of Honorary Fellowship

Honorary Fellowship is the Academy's highest award. It is intended for exceptional individuals whose contributions to medical education are often internationally recognised and who have made a significant contribution to medical education in the United Kingdom.

Dr Andrew Long

Dr Andrew Long was the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health Vice President for Education & Professional Development from 2013 to June 2018 having previously held several senior College roles.

Andrew has been a consultant in general paediatrics for over 28 years. He was appointed to Great Ormond Street Hospital in 2011 to support the development of the new team of general paediatricians. He became Specialty Lead for the general paediatric team in 2013 and was appointed as Associate Medical Director and Responsible Officer in 2016 with a brief for managing revalidation and medical affairs. He is a Lead Assessor for the National Clinical Assessment Service.

Andrew has been a key contributor to the Academy of Medical Royal Colleges where he leads the work on remediation for doctors in difficulty. He has a long-standing interest in mentoring and careers support and completed a Masters in Interprofessional Education in 2008.

Andrew was one of the founding committee members that set up the Academy of Medical Educators, and served on Council for the first four years of our existence, stepping down to take on a senior educational role in the RCPCH. He has remained an Academy Fellow in good standing ever since, maintaining a keen interest in its progress and lending his support wherever possible. The Academy is deeply grateful to him for his support without which it would not be the influential and respected organisation that it is today.

Professor Karen Mattick

Karen Mattick is Professor of Medical Education and co-Lead for the Centre for Research in Professional Learning at the University of Exeter. She has over fifteen years' experience as a medical education researcher and educator. Prior to joining the medical education field, Karen worked for the NHS as a clinical scientist, involved in both service delivery and clinical science research.

She has published over 50 peer-reviewed research papers in medical education and clinical science, and is Senior Associate Editor for The Clinical Teacher journal and Director of Awards for the Association for the Study of Medical Education (ASME). Karen's research explores the experiences of medical students and junior doctors, especially during the transition to clinical practice, and particularly in relation to prescribing antibiotics. This has involved a wide range of methodologies including systematic and realist literature reviews, qualitative, quantitative, and mixed methods research studies, and a particular interest in 'close to practice' research.

Her recent research has been funded by the UK's National Institute of Health Research, the Academy of Medical Royal Colleges, NHS Education for Scotland, and the General Medical Council. Although not solely a qualitative researcher, Karen's values fit strongly with those of the EXQUISITE-for health network, including her wish to support and develop those new to the field of medical education research and academic practice more generally. Her own academic practice has been recognized in the award of National Teaching Fellowship in 2005 and Principal Fellow of the Higher Education Academy in 2012.

Her current education responsibilities include the role of Director of the Postgraduate Certificate in Academic Practice and Co-Chair of the Research-Inspired Learning Steering Group for the University of Exeter, and Chair of the Interprofessional Learning Committee and Dissertation Lead for the Masters of Clinical Education for the University of Exeter Medical School. Karen is committed to the highest possible quality in education and research, being motivated by academic work that makes a clear difference to healthcare processes and outcomes. As such she is an outstanding role model for medical educators, demonstrating her commitment to the values of the Academy of Medical Educators in everything she does.

Professor John Cookson

Professor John Cookson joined the University of Worcester in 2017 as the Development Dean for the Three Counties School of Medicine. He was previously Foundation Professor of Medical Education and Undergraduate Dean at Hull York. He was also involved in the establishment of the Medical School at Warwick and supported the development of the University of Botswana Medical School in 2009.

A graduate of Birmingham Medical School, Professor Cookson's early career included a number of years as a lecturer and senior lecturer in medicine in Zimbabwe. This work was reflected in his MD Thesis on various aspects of asthma in the Zimbabwean population, showing, amongst other things, the seasonal nature of the problem and the links to disturbed immunology. For a large part of his career John was a consultant in general and respiratory medicine in Leicester. At various times, he was college tutor, clinical tutor, associate postgraduate dean and then, co-incident with the publication of the first edition of Tomorrow's Doctors, clinical sub-dean and later Honorary Professor of Clinical Education in Leicester.

John has been committed to medical education throughout his career, his main research interests in being in curriculum design and assessment. In 2017 John gave a fascinating keynote talk at the Academy's assessment conference covering 50 years of assessment from personal experience!

He has functioned at the highest level nationally and has an international reputation. He has written a number of books and many papers on medical education and is highly respected by his peers. He was recently awarded the ASME President's medal for his contribution to medical education. The Academy has been lucky to count him among its Fellows and ardent supporters since our very early days.
